

SHERIDAN'S LAST HOME.

THE GALLANT SOLDIER'S MORTALITY Laid Away.

Something About Gen. Schofield, the Soldier Next in Command—Sheridan's Body Guard—The Titles of General and Lieutenant General No Longer Exist.

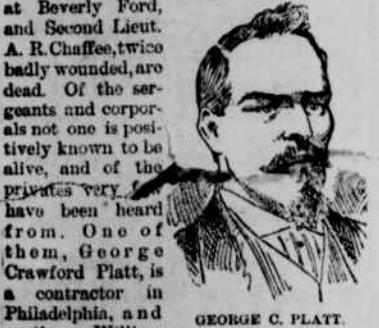

HE late general of the army died at the early age of fifty-seven, and was laid in Arlington cemetery on the 11th instant, just three years after the burial of his old commander, Gen. Grant. The ceremonies at Sheridan's grave were simple but highly impressive, as it was his desire that there should be no general display, and, aside from the services of the Catholic ritual and the ordinary military funeral, there was none.

The site selected for Sheridan's last resting place is extremely beautiful and appropriate; it is but a few rods from the old mansion house of the Arlington estate in open ground with a fringe of trees behind it, where the monument will be in plain sight of the windows of every public building in Washington. The burial plot slopes gently toward the east, at the head of the grave, on the west, stands a beautiful horse chestnut tree, on the left a maple. The monument will have a background of trees, which, in their season of heavy leaf, will make it beautifully conspicuous from Washington, and from the foot of the monument one can overlook all the lovely city. At the foot of the hill east of the grave flows the Potomac, as if Sheridan still kept guard over Washington.

Within bugle call are the graves of 12,000 Union soldiers, of which 4,349 are marked "unknown." In one vast mound, under a massive block of marble, are the bones of 2,111, gathered after the war from Bull Run and other fields on the route to the Rappahannock. Gen. Hazen, Myers, King, Rickards and Paul, the Paul who lost both eyes at Gettysburg, lie buried here. Within the 1,100 acres of this National cemetery there is room for 100,000 graves, and any soldier of the army or man who served in the war for the Union who asks it has the right to a burial place here. The names of Logan and Hancock, and stars and badges of the various army corps, shine in beds of flowers on the dark green banks. Truly, the heroic Sheridan reposes in noble company. And to complete the fitness of the surroundings the superintendent of the cemetery is Maj. Connerford, who led a squadron of Massachusetts cavalry in Sheridan's memorable campaign in the valley.

Of Sheridan's famous body guard in the Shenandoah and Piedmont campaigns, Company H, Sixth United States Cavalry, there are very few survivors. Col. David Hunter, Lieut. Col. William H. Emory and Maj. James H. Carleton, Robert M. Morris and Starr, of the regiment, are all dead. Of the company Capt. Ira W. Claffin, wounded at Funkstown, Md.; First Lieut. Kirm, wounded at Beverly Ford, and Second Lieut. A. R. Chaffee, twice badly wounded, are dead. Of the sergeants and corporals not one is positively known to be alive, and of the privates very few have been heard from. One of them, George Crawford Platt, is a contractor in Philadelphia, and another, William Lloyd, keeps a lumber yard. Mr. Platt was color bearer when the flag of the body guard was shot to rags, and succeeded in saving only the eagle of the center. In 1885 he exhibited this relic at a reunion of the Sixth Virginia cavalry at Calpelper, and Maj. Grimes, of the Sixth Virginia, called him to the stand with this introduction: "Gentlemen and ladies of Virginia, I want to introduce to you a real live Yankee—I mean a fighting Yankee. Do you see this little gold lacquered eagle? Well, I tried fourteen times during the war to get it; I haven't got it yet, and I don't believe I could get it today by fighting."

According to law the titles of general and lieutenant general expire with the death of Sheridan (Sherman having been retired), and revived by congress; but Gen. John M. Schofield, as senior major general, succeeds to many of the powers of the deceased general of the army, subject, however, to the will of the president. Gen. Schofield is noted as one of the very few who grew slowly and steadily from the beginning of the war, with few brilliant successes and no serious mistakes. His first great success was in hastily collecting a force in Missouri and routing Jeff Thompson at Fredericktown. He was present when the final terms of surrender were arranged between Sherman and Johnston in the old house at Goldsboro, N. C. In January, 1865, he won great honor by transferring his corps from Tennessee to Washington in eleven days, arriving in first rate condition for the voyage down the Atlantic coast.

John McCallister Schofield was born Nov. 20, 1824, in Chautauque county, N. Y., and in boyhood moved to Freeport, Ill., whence he was appointed to West Point by Congressmen Thomas J. Turner. Among his classmates there were Gen. Sheridan, McPherson, Ord, and Sherman. He served in the Union army, and was promoted to major general in 1863, and began service as second lieutenant of the First artillery. In 1855 he was made assistant professor at West Point, and after attaining the rank of first lieutenant retired to take the chair of physics in the Washington university at St. Louis. The war found him at the right spot for his talents. He was made a captain of the First Missouri regiment, and thereafter his rise was rapid. In September, 1862, he organized

THE SURRENDER OF JOHNSTON. The army of the frontier and drove Hindman's army out of Missouri and southward of the Arkansas. He became major general in 1863, and served actively in the Army of the Cumberland till the war in the west was over, when he was sent around to North Carolina. There he captured Fort Anderson and Wilmington, won the battle of Kingston, and was with Sherman in the closing days. For some years past he has been in command of the Division of the Atlantic, headquarters on Governor's Island, New York harbor.

GOVERNOR GORDON RENOMINATED.

Georgia Democrats Again Choose Him for Their Standard Bearer.

Gen. John Brown Gordon, who has been renominated by the Democrats of Georgia for governor, is still in the prime of life, but he is 40 years old and well preserved; but he has been a hard student, hard working lawyer and soldier through all grades up to lieutenant general, then lawyer again, congressman, senator, railroad man and governor. He bears the scars of eight wounds received in battle, and innumerable lacerations in politics. After being reduced almost to poverty on the fall of the Southern Confederacy he has built up a handsome fortune and lost much of it, and after seeing his native Georgia completely prostrated he has been among the most active in making it truly the empire state of the south. His career has indeed been remarkable, and he is still young and vigorous enough to rise to higher honors.

Gen. Gordon was much more of a success in war than in politics. He was a successful soldier, but in politics he has been a failure.
